

A GUIDE FOR D2C AND SOCIAL-FIRST BRANDS

The nation's biggest storefront is already searching for your brand.

You built the demand on Shopify, TikTok Shop, and social, and much of it already waits on Amazon. Here is how to find it, and capture it on Vendor, the first-party route to owning the UK's biggest storefront.

1 THE DEMAND IS ALREADY THERE

You made the demand. Amazon is where it goes to buy.

D2C and social-first brands are brilliant at creating demand: TikTok Shop, Instagram, and your own store build genuine want. But that demand does not stay where you made it. Shoppers who discover you on social go to Amazon to buy, because that is where they already have Prime, trust, and one-click convenience.

	OFF AMAZON	ON AMAZON, TODAY
Discovery & demand	TikTok, social, and D2C	Shoppers search for you here
Where it converts	Some, on your own store	Much of it, on Prime, without you
Brand presence	Owned and on-brand	Limited, or via resellers
Pricing control	Yours	Set by whoever holds the listing
The ceiling	Your own channel's reach	The UK's biggest storefront

The latent demand

Branded searches, category intent, and the spillover from your own marketing, all landing on Amazon whether you sell there or not.

Where it goes instead

Uncaptured by you, it converts for third-party resellers, at their price and their presentation, on the brand equity you built.

IN SHORT

Your demand does not disappear when it reaches Amazon. It converts. The only question is whether it converts for you, or for someone selling your brand without you.

The nation's biggest storefront, and the demand waiting in it.

Amazon is the UK's biggest storefront, and for millions of shoppers it is where the buying journey starts. Your brand already has demand inside it. Most brands simply cannot see how much. Before you commit anything, we size it. These are the signals we read to quantify exactly how much latent demand is already there, what it is worth, and how fast you could capture it.

Branded search

How many already search your name on Amazon.

Category demand

The size of your category's Amazon sales.

Reseller activity

Third-party sales of your products you don't control.

Off-Amazon spillover

Demand your social and D2C create that lands here.

Keyword gaps

High-intent searches your brand is absent from.

Subscribe & Save

Repeat-purchase demand for your category.

Review velocity

Unmet demand visible in your and rivals' reviews.

Amazon Business

Trade and bulk (B2B) demand for your products.

Prime overlap

Your audience who default to buying on Prime.

International pull

EU and Ireland demand for your brand.

Competitor share

Category revenue rivals capture that could be yours.

Buy Box & price

Where uncontrolled listings cost you the sale.

New-to-brand

First-time buyers your category pulls on Amazon.

Seasonal spikes

When demand for your category peaks here.

THE POINT

We size the prize first. You see exactly how much latent demand is already on Amazon, and what capturing it is worth, before you move a single unit.

There are two ways onto Amazon. Only one is built to scale.

Capturing that demand is the goal, and how you capture it decides whether Amazon is profitable. There are two routes onto the platform, and for a brand that already generates demand, they are not close.

	SELLER CENTRAL (3P)	VENDOR (1P)
Who sells to the shopper	You do, as a third-party seller	Amazon buys and sells your stock
The Prime badge	Earned, and never guaranteed	On every product, by default
Fees, chargebacks, returns	All on you	Absorbed into the vendor relationship
Fulfilment	You still run the operation	One weekly order, run for you
The D2C fulfilment drag	The same pain, at Amazon scale	Lifted entirely

Why Vendor is right for you

You already create the demand. Vendor gives you Prime, first-party economics, and none of the operational load, so that demand converts profitably instead of costing you to fulfil it.

Why it takes Vendor-as-a-Service

Amazon no longer issues vendor accounts, so the only route onto first-party Vendor is to trade through an established one. Ours is a Top 15 UK Grocery Vendor account.

THE POINT

Seller Central would hand you back the same fulfilment drag you already know, at Amazon's scale. Vendor removes it, and Vendor-as-a-Service is how a brand like yours gets there.

Turn Amazon into an owned channel, and let us fulfil the rest.

This is what Rosetta Brands does. You keep creating demand everywhere. We make Amazon a channel you own and control, trading through our Top 15 UK Vendor account, and we can fulfil your own D2C orders through the same logistics.

Amazon, under your control

Your products trade through our Top 15 vendor account. Grey-market resellers are displaced, and pricing and presentation come back under the brand's control.

One stock pool, both channels

A single fulfilment centre serves Amazon and your own store, so the small-order fulfilment headache disappears.

We fulfil your D2C orders too

We build the integration between your Shopify or TikTok Shop and Amazon, so your direct orders ship hassle-free through Amazon's logistics.

First-party economics

Prime badge, Subscribe & Save, and B2B unlocked, with unified cross-channel analytics and portfolio advertising.

THE NET EFFECT

You keep creating demand everywhere. We convert it into controlled, fulfilled, profitable sales across Amazon and your own store.

"Amazon has the potential to be probably my biggest customer."

UK FMCG brand · on the scale of the opportunity

The step change: from scattered to owned.

A brand with strong demand and no controlled Amazon channel is leaving its biggest storefront to resellers. Consolidating under one Amazon Vendor strategy turns that fragmented presence into an owned, coordinated growth engine, and the results compound fast.

A multi-brand health-food portfolio, fragmented across resellers

This portfolio was scattered across third-party resellers with no brand oversight, no coordinated strategy, and no first-party economics. After consolidating under one Amazon Vendor strategy with Rosetta Brands:

+361%

Revenue growth on the year

4.6x

Average quarterly revenue, £48k to £224k

~£900k

Annual run rate approaching

Zero

Grey-market resellers left

Quarter on quarter the pattern held: Q1 up +706% (£18k to £145k) and Q4 up +282% (£95.5k to £365k). Fragmented resellers were displaced, pricing discipline was restored, and the brand finally owned its own listings.

What the move unlocked

One controlled first-party channel, resellers displaced, Prime and Subscribe & Save live, and demand from every channel converting on-brand.

How it runs now

One stock pool and one fulfilment centre serve Amazon and the D2C store, with unified analytics across both.

"We saw an instant impact on sales. They really know their stuff about the world of Amazon, and offer opportunities to boost sales which we never knew were available to us."

Founder · D2C food brand, now trading on the Rosetta Brands vendor account

We don't just manage Amazon. We are your Amazon account.

Rosetta Brands is the UK's only Vendor-as-a-Service for consumer brands. Your products trade under our Top 15 UK Grocery Vendor account, the first-party status Amazon no longer issues, while we run the channel end to end: the fees, the compliance, the fulfilment, and the advertising. You get enterprise-grade Amazon access and predictable, wholesale-style payment, without building the team or carrying the risk.

£100M+

Generated for our clients

950+

UK brands worked with

100+

Amazon Best Sellers

15+ yrs

Amazon experience

A FEW OF THE BRANDS WE TRADE FOR

See how much demand is already waiting for you on Amazon.

A clear read on exactly how much latent demand your brand has on Amazon today, what it is worth, and what changes when it becomes a channel you own. If it is the right move, we will show you exactly what it looks like, step by step.

info@rosettabrands.com | +44 (0)333 344 8171 | www.rosettabrands.com